MR. DOOLEY REVIEWS THE SUPREME COURT'S DECISION.

By F. P. DUNNE.

Copyright 1901, by Robert Howard Russell.

"I see," said Mr. Dooley, "the Supreme Court has decided the constitution doesn't follow the flag."

"Who said it did?" asked Mr. Hennessy.

"Don't you?" said Mr. Dooley. "It happened a long time ago and I don't remember clearly how it came up, but some fellow said that wherever the constitution went, the flag was sure to go."

"I don't believe that," said Mr. Dooley. "I don't believe that wherever the constitution goes, the flag is sure to go."

"I don't believe that," said Mr. Dooley. "I don't believe that wherever the constitution goes, the flag is sure to go."

"I don't believe that," said Mr. Dooley. "I don't believe that wherever the constitution goes, the flag is sure to go."

TO BE QUEEN OF THE P. W. LEAGUE.

Mrs. Edwin Knowles Will Be Reigning Star of the Professional Woman's League.

The League that numbers among its members so many stars of the dramatic stage, so many lights of literature and so many women noted in other branches of art, will henceforth have as its presiding officer Mrs. Edwin Knowles. She was installed as successor to Mrs. A. M. Palmer to the accompaniment of floods of tears, cauldrons of tea and a profusion of flowers.

IN DEBT ALL AROUND.

Owen Finnigan, a right brave-hearted son of Erin, began life actively as a deck hand on an Alabama River steamer, in the palm days of steamboating, before the railroad removed most of its picturesque and comfortable craft from the inland waters.

Finnigan declared, according to Francis Taylor, that when he was a deck hand, the cook, who was also an Irishman, would call to him: "Ah, there, Finnigan, ye blackguard, come and eat. And be in a hurry, ye spalpeen."

Finnigan would hurry forward to get his humble dinner.

Finally Finnigan got to be an officer on the boat, and the cook's tongue changed to: "Mr. Finnigan, dinner is ready."

In the fullness of time Finnigan became captain, and the cook's speech underwent another change: "Captain Finnigan, ye honor, will you please take your tea?"

That was the cook's way of acknowledging that Finnigan had reached the top of the ladder. And the story that good "Hannis" tells bristles with that worldly wisdom that comes of human experience.

There was a man in Mobile many years ago, so the story goes, who had a notably personal resemblance to Finnigan. This man was noted for contracting debts and never paying them, for thriftless habits generally, and for partaking of too much strong drink.

A visitor to Mobile approached this man one night in Royal street, and asked:

"Aren't you Owen Finnigan?"

"I dunno, I dunno," answered the poor fellow in a wondering way. "I am owing everybody else. I reckon I am owing Finnigan, too."—Boston Courier.
